Hypereosinophilic syndrome (HES) is a disorder characterized by elevated blood eosinophilia (greater than 1500/mm3) and by organ involvement, particularly in the heart, lungs and peripheral blood vessels. We report our experience with four patients. Their mean age was 30.5 years and male to female ratio was 2:1. Mean values of blood eosinophilia were 2435.5/mm3 (6234/mm3). Purpura was associated in all patients and edema in two patients. Three patients were pregnant. No previous history of allergy was reported. Clinical and laboratory data and organ examination were normal. After the diagnosis (mean duration: 12 months), prednisone (40 mg/d) was started. After 9 months of follow-up, all patients presented improvement of blood eosinophilia, decrease of blood values of soluble CD8 receptor and IgE (mean values: 1720.5/mm3, 311.4 pg/ml, and 314.7 IU/ml respectively), without change of organ involvement. HES is a rare, well-defined syndrome characterized by hypereosinophilic blood values, often associated with tissue involvement. Q: WxWidgets / Python: Multiple Columns I'm using wxWidgets 3.0.0 on Windows, and I'm having some trouble with building a GUI with multiple tabs. I have set it up so that there is a frame in the main window (MainWindow.xrc), with two child windows (Child1.xrc, Child2.xrc). I have set up the frame to have no border, and I want the child windows to be arranged in columns, using the wx.FlexGridSizer control. When I run my program, however, all I see is a single large window. I want to have two columns of windows, with the horizontal space between them filled out by the Child1.xrc and Child2.xrc windows. Here is the MainWindow.xrc file:
