In this case, you may want to have a picture of the building not with natural light but instead with a strong light shining on it. Because it might be difficult to find a location with such a light, it may be helpful to compose a picture of the building as a still life, using a studio lighting setup. Here's how to do that. Here's how to use the following techniques to shoot and work with still life images:

Downtown Houston's focus Downtown Houston's major new development projects will be geared toward creating a pedestrian environment, offering businesses on the ground floor the opportunity to attract pedestrians and away from traditional strip centers and congested malls, and using technology to promote downtown, including a new interactive video monitor and the launch of a new program by the Downtown Houston Partnership that will enlist the help of the public. And indeed, the Houston Downtown Management District, which includes Main Street on the west side of Downtown Houston and Main Street in the Uptown area on the east side, is in the middle of a $75 million investment in downtown to revitalize the city's traffic flow, the retail experience, the streetscape and the downtown experience for Houstonians. Among the projects funded by the district is a pedestrian-oriented, interactive video monitor, the Big Blue Bag, designed to alert shoppers and pedestrians to events on the streets around Main Street. The project will be launched in April. "It's like a big iPhone with a bunch of screens on it," says Tom Wilkinson, Downtown Houston Partnership's executive director and chief operating officer. The district is also soliciting ideas from businesses and residents for how to turn the corner of Main and Houston streets into a public space like the corner of Main and Travis in the Texas Medical Center. The idea is to turn the corner into a pedestrian-friendly destination rather than the parking lot it is today. "We want to come up with ideas for that to be a plaza, to be a big public space for retail, for pedestrian-oriented activities," Wilkinson says. "The idea is to create ways to make that space count." The district is also looking to implement an interactive video monitor, the Big Blue Bag, which will notify retailers of upcoming events on Houston's streets. The Big Blue Bag uses a 10-foot LCD monitor that will display five to seven different video messages, one of which will be displayed for 30 seconds every 15 minutes on each corner of Main Street from 6 a.m. to 10 p.m. The project is expected to cost about $250,000 and will be funded by a grant from the state's Transportation Fund. The district is also redesigning Houston's main public and private parking garages in hopes of making their spaces more efficient and by using high-end technology that will alert drivers and drivers' assistants (such as key-less entry) when they are nearby. "It will enable us to actually let them
