I would like to apply conditional formatting on a column and have the formatting only apply if the value in the cell is less than 1. Any way to do this? I have tried using =AND($C4$C4) but this does not seem to be the correct syntax. A: You need to use the 'equal to' selector (=), not the 'greater than' or 'less than' selectors (>) or (<) crane is widely used in various fields, such as factories, construction sites, and the like. A crane in which the working gondola is mounted on a turn table has been proposed, wherein the turn table is mounted so as to be rotatable in a horizontal direction and an angular direction.

The turn table is supported so as to be non-rotatable in an upright direction orthogonal to the horizontal direction and the angular direction. Japanese Laid-Open Patent Publication No. 2009-240218 discloses an arrangement in which a tiller is fixed to a forward end of a working gondola via a mounting frame. The mounting frame is pivotally supported by a pivot support beam fixed to the turn table, and may freely be inclined by a certain degree around the pivot support beam. The mounting frame is rotated by a hydraulic drive device to incline the working gondola around the pivot support beam. According to the arrangement of the above-described patent document, a range within which the working gondola is vertically movable is reduced due to the operation of the hydraulic drive device. Therefore, the working gondola has to be inclined or elevated in order to make the working gondola pass through a space having a vertical height that is greater than a horizontal distance between a lower end of the working gondola and the floor. This may affect other operations in the factory or the like.

Furthermore, the hydraulic drive device is complex in structure and needs to be secured to a mounting frame. This may increase costs.Q:

How to assign a custom ID using django-rest-auth for an existing user I have a DRF + DRF-auth setup. I'm using django-rest-auth for the login/signup stuff. What I need to know is if it's possible to assign a custom id to a user using django-rest-auth? Using @user.pk id would not be sufficient, that id would be generated whenever a new user is created, i need to grab the id from the user on login, and then assign it back to that user. That way it would be possible to prerender the userlist with the custom ids. A:

Found a solution, just needed to look around in the django-rest-auth source. Adding this to settings
