Amelia Earhart is an airplane pilot who disappeared in 1937 during her attempt to become the first woman to fly across the Atlantic. The time she was scheduled to make the attempt coincided with a tropical storm, and she was forced to cancel her mission and land on the sea. Scuba divers from the University of Hawaii were later able to find the wreckage of the plane, but the bodies of the occupants were never found. Most of Amelia Earhart's belongings were discovered in a coconut grove in the area of the crash, and the grove has since been dubbed the "Amelia Earhart Grove". However, her actual remains were never found. In 1953, the cremated bones of a woman who was genetically related to Amelia Earhart was found in the grove, and was immediately identified as the missing pilot. This grove has been successfully used for sending messages to future generations. If you want to send a secret message to your descendants in the future, please consider donating to the grove. What's new in Piwall:

spent his early days on this blog writing an insulting and vile Christmas ad for Ford that became something of a family favourite for a long time. It went like this: Barbara had an anxiety attack this morning, so we cancelled the party. The only problem is that a rather important customer is coming by train from London this afternoon, and we really need him to have a drink in the pub. We're down to one spare bottle of whisky and I bought the Widmerdon Blackberry Beer for real this time - we had to limit ourselves because of the company when we made the ad last time Laid back in the bed with the curtains drawn, I'm writing this on my new electric typewriter. There's lots of fun to be had. At the last minute we've got a WPC/Superintendent character guest, let's hope she makes an appearance. But enough of that. The party can go ahead if they want, of course: We'll be having cheese, and you don't need to bring your own sticky toffee pudding, we've got plenty. And a Christmas Single in an Oak Stump bottle: We knew we'd be drinking a lot of whisky around this time, so we thought we'd replace the ailing little Tomiie with the company as "Widmerdon Blackberry beer". The memories are flooding back. This was the first ad we made for VW after my return from Aarhus. I could almost taste the bitterness of the Widmerdon wheat beer as I sloughed off the Atos healthcare nomenclature. We need a belly laugh today. Tomorrow is Decoration Day. Phew, that's enough for today. Why we need the belly laugh today, I really don't know. What it means is a truly determined attempt to prevent the motor trade slaughtering the planet. I have to say that a good belly laugh is a welcome relief, and a run-on sentence a rare occurrence. The risk of getting carried away in the company of good writers was then brought home to me when I was using one of my posts on King's Ceiling Yawn on A1Writing to write an article for NewAssisst magazine. Anybody who has read my scribbled synopsis for my article on writing has seen the real reason I don't do advertising for nearly as much as I want to.

Ferroplasma is a roguelike third-person shooter that mixes game mechanics of an action, strategy, and simulation game. It runs as a standalone game and can be played like any other third-person shooter, with little to no previous game knowledge. The game has an open world with procedurally generated levels to create a unique experience every time you play. The game is fully voiced with voice acting done by professional voice talent. All units and weapons are completely customizable with more to come in the future. When you're in your ship you can turn on the sub-drives and jump to various locations all over the planet. The main camera is not locked to one position, so you can look around with ease. And there's full physics driven multiplayer, so you will have to be quick. The End The Game Intro and Outro Animation Written & Created by: Blair Arthur O'Rourke Music, sound art, and composition by Kitaru - It may be free to use in videos, games, and websites but permission to use this music in my music library, Youtube videos, blogs, and so on is required for it to be used. You're simply reading fiction. The Slave Girl is a science fantasy romance that I created around a fantastical story about a young woman named Raven and a man who named Mesmer. It takes place in a dystopian future world where a "virus" (later called "the gift") will either turn humans into mind slaves or save them from mind slavery. It's told as a series of letters between Raven and Mesmer, told during the course of being swept up into an even more terrible fate. Take a journey into a war ravaged Europe. An infestation has spread, driven by a machine with a singular purpose, to kill everything in its path. Now on the eve of the deadliest winter in living memory, you take the role of Jack, a soldier fighting to stand against the enemy and keep humanity alive. In a world stripped of humanity, nothing is true. Is the world you knew even real? Take a journey into
