What you peace of Computation 2nd Edition Solution Manuals Download - Explorable. an ambiguous person. ~~~ headcanon The phrase "consensus of the group" _is_ ambiguous. ----- therealmarv The HN discussion from last time is here: [----- deevolution You know what would be a much better approach? To actually make games of your own, with fully integrated authentication processes, Facebook accounts (or Google or Microsoft accounts for Windows and Xbox users), and rewards/rewards systems where you can actually link in earned credits to items/toys/accessories/other items, etc. Then the companies that are interested in games, pay the expenses instead of getting the users to pay for the games. ----- rdl Playing Minecraft is not good use of my time, but also I mostly spend my limited free time on the computer. ----- idlwords It's the reason I've turned down the loot boxes of Fortnite, and the reason I never play games where I can't see how my friends are faring. ----- mythrwy I have an idea for a game where you can trade in value for access to interesting information. The utility of the value would be in how much interesting data you have access to. The concept is similar to a kind of 'quilt'. You can collect any old thing, but there is a finite amount of value in that, and by exchange with friends you can have access to places that have less value, or an entirely different set of values. Each person just saves money that they might have spent on the same types of things. So for example let's imagine the value of all the information collected per hour at the year 0. If you have access to a particular set of data there would be less value in that data than others. And other information or things might be at different levels of value. Let's say John Doe sends you some level 1 data about a professor's work, and Alice whispers to you some level 5 data about a drugs lawyer. Both of these levels exist
