I have found the same problem for a lot of rar files (most of them, not all), but most of them had downloaded versions of the rar that were older than the ones I found on the net. Is this a flaw in Rar?

Or maybe there is something wrong with the software I use to extract rars (WinRAR)? A: The error message looks like it's somehow referencing material from a file with a resource stream (RAR 5.25+.+) that has been destroyed. I don't know how the archive was created, but that is most likely the explanation here. It's likely that the resource stream was incorrectly restored on extraction, and the directory (e.g. Volume0.bin) at the root of the archive is damaged, but otherwise contains some valid data. You can use 7-Zip to extract a file as text so the resource stream isn't damaged.
