Recent studies have shown that a number of growth factors and cytokines can regulate the human mononuclear cell apoptosis and proliferation. The anti-inflammatory cytokine, interleukin 10 (IL-10), is produced by mononuclear cells and suppresses the synthesis of proinflammatory cytokines. We undertook this study to investigate whether IL-10 levels in bronchoalveolar lavage fluid (BALF) were changed during active pulmonary tuberculosis (PTB). BALF samples were collected from 12 patients with culture-proved active PTB and from seven control patients with lung cancer and no history of lung infection. Human IL-10 concentrations in BALF from PTB patients were significantly decreased ($p = 0.03$) compared with those of controls.Q: JasperReports added fields in new report with same sequence/position but different value as rest of report I'm generating reports with the rest of the team and the format I'm most familiar with is PDF format. We have a newer iReport program, which automatically generates the reports without annotations. I noticed that sometimes the report has been generated with annotations, however with completely different data. For example, I will have a count of rows in a section, and the next section will have a different number of rows but different kind of data for those rows. The data is completely different for each row, but the type of data (row content, field names, etc.) is exactly the same. Is there a reason why this would be happening? Is there a way to prevent this? A: Try to reorder your sections in the report. I doubt it's a bug as it's really strange for developers to make something like this, however it's possible that iReport does it by default. Q: How to wrap native callable with Scala function I'm trying to create a function called process like so: def process[T](callback: callable[T, S], fn:
