HyperMotion Technology accurately simulates player body movement, using real-life data from actual footballers, to create a more responsive and authentic experience. This is accomplished through a combination of the following features: Body Tracking: Each body part of the player is tracked and, when kicked, manipulated and animated according to how it would realistically move. This allows a player's legs to respond to the motion of the ball in a more lifelike and realistic way. Match Status: As well as in-game fatigue, body tracking allows for a more accurate representation of injury status. A player's injury status will change depending on the state of their body during the match, and can be seen in the menus and stat board. Knees and Ankles: With a realistic representation of the knees and ankles of all players, FIFA 22 allows defenders to more realistically lunge or hop back from a high ball, and attackers to head in more comfortable positions from the defender's advanced physique. Rotation: As the direction that a player moves on the pitch changes, the player will rotate realistically based on the spin of the ball, resulting in accurate full-field reflexes. Positioning: Upon receiving the ball, an accurate and dynamic simulation of positioning allows defenders to cover with greater precision, while those players positioned in attack receive a more convincing routine to chase down and challenge the ball as they are pushed forward. Assist Move: As players gain possession, their ability to accurately kick and pass the ball has been enhanced based on the position of their feet. For example, a defender receiving the ball at his side will likely kick the ball more accurately than a defender receiving the ball in midfield. The Good In order to show off the capabilities of the HyperMotion Technology, let's focus on the little things. For instance, taking a look at a player in possession makes it more clear to see the HyperMotion features present. A player receiving the ball between the lines of the opposition will immediately know to get the ball up to their foot to keep the ball rolling rather than use a backswing to spin the ball and allow the defence to close them down for a counterattack. This also clearly shows how body tracking helps make these features possible. Now with hindsight, the effects are more obvious than in previous iterations of the game. Head tracking is also more realistic than before. Rather than hold it at
