I just read that pull is only used to pull the latest changes to a repository (from another repo), and that update is used to update your working directory to the latest changes (from your project's repository). What is the difference between these two commands? What could be a use case for using one or the other, e.g. when branching or merging? Thanks, George A: Update: pull is the only basic Git command. It's intended to be used to do a local fetch, not to update your working directory. git fetch updates your remote-tracking branch. 6d1f23a050
