Adobe, Inc. announced the beta release of the update, back in February. Version 4.0 also includes support for more camera formats as well as the addition of many new photo editing features. The single most exciting addition in Lightroom 4.0 is the opportunity for users to navigate through their collection of images with the new Collection browser. The Collection browser is a sidebar that shows all of the images you have organized into Collections. If you can master the mouse, then you can always use the previous versions of Photoshop. And, if you work with images on a day-to-day basis on a PC or laptop, you'll appreciate the faster performance of PSD over PSD files. It's more convenient to do image development, especially when you're dealing with large images, on a larger screen. And, because you get the exporting in a separate window, you can easily see real-time results, rather than have to go back to Photoshop and reload the image. One of the biggest upsides to using an iPad is that it doesn't use an external keyboard to operate like a regular computer. What this means is that you can hold the iPad in portrait and use your fingers, hands, or stylus to work. And that's exactly what the Windows and macOS versions of Photoshop allow. The latest version is not the same as past versions, and it means that while there are many tweaks to the interface of PS, not all of the features in terms of doing Photoshop work are available. The new PSD, layer, and editing tools are all better than the old ones, but it's not perfect. You do retain the old features like the margin bead tool.
