No longer just taking a sip from the neck of your girlfriend's best friend, tonic quenched with a wedge of orange, the sports car is now expected to be almost as social a vehicle as the car itself. The 250 Testarossa is no exception. As a small, high-performance, midrange, four-seater sports car, the 250 Testarossa has always been about cheeky fun and character. To promote the 25th anniversary of this model, Ferrari created the "Tessie," which is Italian for tank. Titled the "25 Years Special," the limited edition set of 750 cars will be available in June for an undisclosed price. Offered as a two-seater, the car aims to fill the gap between the 250 GTO and the Testarossa, and can use either the Testarossa's standard 3.4-liter, twin-turbo V8 or the Testarossa's own, 4.6-liter, twin-turbo V8. "It's the best of the two worlds," said Alistair Potter, who heads up Ferrari North America. "The people who like the horsepower of a GTO will like the power and character of the Testarossa. We're offering a two-seat version of the Testarossa that still has the race car character of the GTO." Potter said the Testarossa starts at about $250,000 and can be customized to have a $10,000 or $20,000 options package, depending on the engine used and the color chosen. "In some ways, it's the most accessible Ferrari sports car," he said. "The acceleration is spectacular, and it accelerates like a race car." The Testarossa is rated at about 550 hp, though "those engines can go as high as 613 hp in this car," said Steve Lowry,
